

WORK TOGETHER, JESUS SAYS

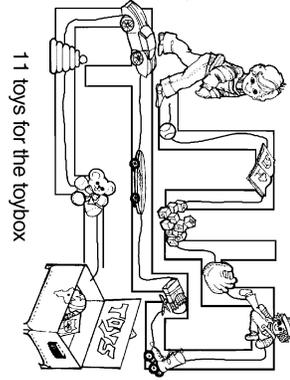

(Jerusalem) — Jesus thought a lot about the disciples (followers) who had listened to his message for three years. He knew that when he went away and left them on their own, they would be tempted not to do God's work the way they should.

One reason Jesus was worried about his followers was that they had already started to argue with each other, even while Jesus was still with them. One time two of them even tried to get Jesus to give them thrones to sit on. This had made the other ten disciples angry.

Jesus prayed for the disciples. He asked God to help them work together. He wanted them to agree about the important things — doing God's work and loving one another. He knew if they would do that, God's work could get done and many people would be saved.
